There are many methods you could use. There is a very good explanation here: Essentially, instead of using a single day per week, you use seven different days, and instead of a single first hour, you use seven different first hours. In your case, you could try using the following: BEGIN:

me, you could try using five letter per week. However, in order to turn those five letters into seven days, you would have to add the first hours, then the days of the week. So, you would take those five letters, and use the first hour of the day to form them into seven days. So, in your case, you would take: AUTH And assign that to Monday, Thursday and Sunday. Then assign CCA to Tuesday and Wednesday. And finally assign UC to Wednesday and Thursday. Again, these are just suggestions. In my book, the only way that you can really "heal the subconscious" is to use a more powerful tool. A tool that I do not have. Q: why the properties are not being changed in my subclass of an object? i wrote this code:

void main() { test *obj = new test(); obj->setValue(10); printf("%d", obj->value()); } class test { int value; test(int x):value(x) { cout
